

If digestion is weak, don't diet— Don't Starve

When the stomach cannot digest all foods, some people eat only foods that it can digest.

That means partial starvation!

The various parts of the body require different food elements. And when some are omitted, some parts are robbed of nourishment.

Food will do more than medicine when we are dealing with weakness.

Those with weak digestion need it more than the strong.

The right way is to eat what you need and want, then let Kodol digest it.

For Kodol digests everything. It doesn't rely solely on pepsin, as other digesters do. Pepsin digests albumen only.

Kodol digests starch, fats and phosphates just as well as albumen.

It also does what the bowels do toward digestion. It supplies pancreatic juice.

Kodol alone does all that the stomach does and all that the bowels do.

No other digester completely digests all foods.

Kodol stops the irritation of undigested food. All pains cease instantly.

It gives the weak stomach rest. A weak stomach is like a lame ankle. Nature alone can cure it.

The best you can do is to give Nature a chance.

That is what Kodol does.

Let it, for a little time, do all the stomach's work. Let it stop the irritation, stop the pain. You will be surprised to see how quickly the weak stomach recovers.

Our Guarantee

On the first dollar bottle of Kodol your druggist gives a signed guarantee. If it fails to do all we claim, your druggist returns your money. You take no risk whatever. This $1.00 bottle contains 2½ times as much as the 50c bottle. Made by E. C. DeWitt & Co., Chicago.

HE HESITATED.

"Help!" The unnerving, harrowing screams of a strong man, whose strength and manhood have collapsed beneath the sudden strain of some deadly fear, some overpowering agony.

The river looked placidly beautiful. A growing circle of wavelets swept slowly over its calm surface—swept away as though shrinking in horror from the grewsome bubbles that came sputtering up where the swimmer had sunk like lead.

A minute before Vernon Dale had stopped to admire the solitary swimmer's strength and grace as he cut through the water like some fabulous sea creature, with a beautiful side stroke.

"Help!" Dale started and looked back. The swimmer had disappeared, but a tiny whirlpool on the peaceful face of the river showed where the young man had been forced to yield.

"Cramp!" muttered Dale. Dale was a strong swimmer himself. He flung off his coat and vest and was tearing madly at his heavy walking boots, when he stopped and seemed suddenly as if turned to stone.

He had thought of Nina! "I can't do it!" he said hoarsely, as if to the man whose life had been choked and stifled out of him somewhere down among the dark loathsome weeds and slime. "I can't do it. I don't risk it. I might kill the woman I love!"

Mechanically Dale put on his coat and vest again. No one would ever know!

"We will keep our secret well—we two!" he said in a horrible whisper, looking down as if he could see something at the bottom of the dark river. Then he glanced hastily left and right. Someone might have been watching after all.

An hour after when Vernon Dale arrived faint, sick and pallid, at the parsonage, he knew that he dared not keep his terrible secret. Until that day his life had been clean and he had been accounted an honorable man. He must tell some one, and that very soon.

"Is your brother in?" he asked her soon.

"No, Vernon, he is out walking, but he will be in soon. I am so sure you and Claude will be real friends—oh, Vernon, something is the matter with you—tell me what it is!"

He buried his face in his hands. He was undergoing torture, for he knew he could not keep silence much longer.

Nina was on her knees beside him. He felt her soft face touch his arms and her arms twined around his.

"Vernon, if there is anything on your mind tell me. No one can help you as I can, for no one loves you as I do!"

"You are right, Nina," he answered in a hoarse broken voice. "I will tell you—I must."

She waited. Her eyes were fixed on him in mute agony.

"As I was coming along the bank on my way here, there was a man swimming. I passed him, and when I was about a hundred yards from him, he gave a cry and sank."

"How horrible!" she murmured with a shudder. "But—but that is not all?"

"No, Nina. I ran back to the place where he sank, but I did not try to save him for your sake. I was just on the point of plunging in when I thought of you, and of all I am to you—and then I couldn't. God forgive me if I did wrong, but it seemed to me at the time that it was right."

She rose to her feet and staggered to a chair, white as death. "If you had died!" she said, clenching her hands and looking at him wildly. "If you had died * * * I could have borne it. I should have known I loved a brave man!"

"Have mercy on me, Nina!" he gasped, losing his hold of her. She rose and stood before him, looking at him with eyes that neither reproached, pitied, nor pardoned him. He stretched out his hands to her in an agony of appeal.

"And I will try to love you again." She flung herself down upon a sofa and gave way to an agony of weeping. "Oh, Claude! Claude!" she wailed.

"Very well," said Vernon grimly. "I will abide by your brother's decision."

A crunching of heavy feet on the gravel walk beneath the window. The subdued hum of hushed voices. Vernon sprang to the window in an agony of vague fear.

"What is that? Who are they?" screamed Nina in an agony of horror. He did not answer. He was looking out at something a couple of men were slowly carrying up to the house. Something covered with a tarpaulin that they bore on a stretcher.

"Something has happened—I must go and see. He moved forward to restrain her, but she went out of the room.

He stood there by himself, trembling violently in every nerve, a cold perspiration bursting from every pore. In his agony he cried aloud.

And Vernon Dale learned the verdict. The lifeless body of Nina's brother proclaimed him guilty.

ZUNI INDIAN CORN PLANTER.

Primitive Implement Still in Use by Red Men of the Southwest.

The Zuni Indians of New Mexico are a self-supporting people who retain many of the interesting customs of prehistoric ancestors. The accompanying drawing represents the implement which they use for planting corn. It is hewn from a piece of hard cedar and is practically a wooden spade, the projecting horizontal piece near the base being for the foot of the digger to press upon. In early spring, when the oak leaves are the size of squirrels' ears, the Zuni farmer fills a basket with seed corn of as many colors as Joseph's coat; and slinging it and his corn planter across his burro's back, he mounts the patient little beast himself and goes jogging out on the plain to his sandy corn ground, which may be many miles from his home. Moisture in that arid land lies deep, so he must make with his wooden planter a much deeper hole than an Eastern farmer would think of making. Then he drops into it a few grains of corn, draws the sandy loam carefully over them with the blade of the planter, and proceeds to dig another hole six or eight feet away. And so on until the seed is all planted.

Monster and Rattler.

Dr. James B. Baillitt, of Louisville, writes of a Gila monster and a rattlesnake:

"A two years' residence in Arizona made me quite familiar with both of these reptiles; for a good part of the time I had one of the former tied to the leg of my office table by a string. In his native habitat the monster is credited with being the enemy of the rattlesnake, and is said to kill him."

"Chancing to have both reptiles on hand at the same time, I put them in a large box together and awaited results."

"The rattler coiled in one end of the box; the monster would wade up to him, root under his coils with his nose and finally nip down on a coil near the tail."

"The rattler would then spring to the other end of the box and recoil. After this had happened a number of times the monster finally succeeded in seizing the snake by the neck just back of the head."

"He held a firm grip until the snake was choked to death. The monster sickened and died a couple of days afterward. On removing his skin I found two punctured wounds on his back, evidently the result of the snake's having struck him once."

A Mussulman at Prayer.

When saying his prayers the true Mussulman is not easily disturbed.

Hans Doering, in his account of his travels in Chinese Turkestan, writes:

"It is an interesting sight to see a Mussulman perform his devotions. Through the piece of glass in my paper window I saw the interpreter spread his carpet in front of his house just opposite the one in which I was living. His wife and child came quite close to him talking loudly with some visitors, but this did not in the least disturb the old man at his devotions."

"In spite of the noise the melodious chanting of the koran was quite audible. The worshiper knotted several times and cried 'Allah! Allah! Allah!' Then for a while stood reverentially clasping his hands crosswise upon his breast, after which he joined in the conversation. His wife then went through the same performance, doing exactly the same as her husband. This they do every morning and evening whether there are friends with them or not."

Private Wrought by Rats.

It is estimated that the rat does $50,000,000 worth of damage a year in England. In a slaughter house near Paris rats in a single night picked to the bone the carcasses of 35 horses. There is very little that they will not eat. Eggs, young birds and animals are among the dainties which they snap up in the ordinary course of business, but when pressed by hunger they will eat anything through which they can drive their terrible teeth. Rat will eat rat. The idea that a trapped rat will bite off an imprisoned leg and so escape is now said to be wrong; it is the other rats which do the biting. They eat the captive.
